MARGATE

A sea-port town of the county of Kent, situated in the parish of St. John the Baptist, in the Isle of Thanet, at the distance of 72 miles E. S. E. from London, 16 from Canterbury, and 4 from Ramsgate. It is within the liberty of the Cinque-Ports, under the jurisdiction of the mayor and corporation of Dover, contains about 1100 houses, and 5000 inhabitants, and is justly celebrated as a place of resort, during the summer season, for company from all parts of England ; but principally from the metropolis, on account of the easy and commodious conveyance by water, which is most frequently accomplished in a day. The bathing is generally considered to be superior to that of any other watering place in the kingdom, and for this purpose the bathing-houses are fitted up in a style of peculiar accommodation, containing elegant music and waiting rooms, warm baths, &c. for the use of invalids. As a proof of the foregoing assertion, the General Sea-Bathing Infirmary, the only institution of the kind in England, is erected at the distance of about half a mile from the town, and the very beneficial effects of this valuable charity, are most truly and ably set forth in the Annual Reports of the Directors, proving it to be highly deserving of the royal and noble patronage it receives. The trade is confined to the shipment of grain, the produce of the country adjacent, for the London market. There is but one church, with five other places of worship, in the town. It enjoys two weekly markets, on Wednesday and Saturday, but no fair, and a corn-market is held on Thursday at the Fountain Inn; also a daily market for fish. The harbour, adapted chiefly for the use of the passage vessels, and also for the reception of shipping in distress, received material damage in January 1808, from a most severe gale of wind and high tide, which has rendered it necessary to erect a new pier, intended to be built on a much more extensive scale. This work is carrying on under the direction of Mr. Rennie.
